

Brad Gehrke has an extensive background of more than 25 years experience in cooperatives, international trade, and agricultural marketing. As an economist at USDA Cooperative Services, he provided technical assistance to agricultural cooperatives as well as designing and implementing research to monitor and evaluate their structure, conduct, and performance. He also designed and implemented economic and demographic studies of the U.S. veterinary medical profession and animal health industries. He has served as an International Trade Analyst for the United States International Trade Commission where his specialty areas included international meat marketing and dairy trade issues.

His backgrounds include coursework for an MS in Agricultural Economics as well as a PhD at the University of Missouri. He has real life experience running both a dairy and a hog farm.
